

The Fence

A husband and wife were driving down a road when they came across a spot where they used to make out when they were younger. The wife says, “Sweetheart, let’s do the same thing we did here forty years ago!”

The husband stops the car. His wife backs against the fence, and he immediately jumps her like a bass on a junebug. They make love like never before. She is screaming and gyrating and shaking uncontrollably; when it’s over, much to her husband’s surprise, she faints!

After he revives her and gets her back in the car, the husband, quite astounded, says, “Darling, you sure never moved like that forty years ago—or anytime since that I can remember.”

The woman, gasping for breath, finally able to speak, says, “Well, forty years ago that darn fence wasn’t electrified!”